MAPLE LEAF 1974

"Examine me, O God, and know my thoughts;
test me and understand my misgivings.
Watch lest I follow any path that grieves thee;
guide me in the ancient ways."

Psalms 139:23-24

J. Lawrence and Harriet Burkholder

"Do not be conformed to this world means the possibility of making an independent judgement about who we are and about what kind of lives we want to live as people . . . I think that nonconformity at this stage in our history will come through knowledge, not ignorance. There was a time when I could understand why the church fathers would say, watch out for those educated people because they fall for the wisdom of the world. I think now we may say, watch out for the uneducated people for they fall for the folly of the world. There is real danger of our simply not knowing what is going on. And so far as we have intellectual resources among our young people especially, we should encourage them to use their heads, and use their heads for the sake of Jesus Christ."

J. Lawrence Burkholder, President of Goshen College
Sermon to the College Mennonite Church, July, 1973

"Now it's fine if the truth is real to you, but if it's not, it's you who are left out and not the truth. If you really believe that your sense of reality is the criterion of truth, as many people under thirty have believed recently, because they misunderstood their mothers who misunderstood Dr. Spock—if you believe that the truth of the truth depends on your sense of reality, that the world has to come to you to be accredited, then you're in trouble."

John Howard Yoder
Goshen College Convocation address, October 22, 1973

"We can never really be a full member of our society, because the point of reference for the Christian is the Gospel, a gospel that is always expressed to us in culture and yet a gospel that stands in judgement on all culture. So the Christian . . . is a stranger and a pilgrim, always."

Robert L. Ramseyer
Goshen College Convocation address, November 7, 1973

"Having been conditioned in my teens and twenties to believe that my quietistic heritage was a cultural dead end whose main relation to me was as something to be escaped, I find in my thirties and forties that, living among a nation of frenetic escapees, there is a Chagall-like intensity in my past that lends itself to a universal vision, if the viewer is alive enough . . . An identity-giving tradition is not something one can pick up at a bargain counter later in life."

John L. Ruth
Letter to Dawn Ruth, student at Goshen College, Memorial Day, 1972.

"We'll be coming up broadside against the demonic forces that are abroad, so remember who conquered them and with whom we are allied."

Professor Mary Bender
Twentieth Century Fiction introductory lecture, Spring, 1973

ON CAMPUS

We return—rusty mind-machines burping into action. Truck drivers, waitresses, followers of the wheat harvest, deep Caribbean tans, burnt-out wanderers and veterans of the rubber factory; from Europe, Korea, India, the hollers of Kentucky, the squalor of Port-au-Prince, the farm life of Harleysville and Middlebury we come.

But as always, the tans fade, enthusiasm wavers and the worlds that were not Goshen don't clash anymore with Goshen. We burrow in for the winter, nurturing ourselves on bad food and hoarded summer memories, which too soon lose their power to mitigate the severity of insipid Indiana.

We return—a bit wistful and not quite convinced that the shopping bag of books, with their hazy promise of spiritual and mental adventure, has the ability to sustain our senses as did the Life Adventurous, still piping and whirling in the sun.

We come to learn to grow and to examine the constant flux of our lives in the constant flow of our world.
We come from all corners and watch through all colors.
Some of us do four years here
Some leave quickly and don't come back.
But we stay awhile, camp by the fire of learning snatch up coals to light our way burn and curse and jump back Until we are lucky, or gifted, or blessed and find we can hold the fire to glow like a second heart—and the night no longer stares with such cold eyes.

Indian summer afternoon, and rock'n'roll comes rumbling from that huge stereo on first floor.
Makes the sunlight seem a bit more mellow, and a bit more clear at the same time.
Interesting phenomenon.
Do sound waves affect photons?
This book's not reading itself,
I guess. Three pages in the last half-hour? Not bad, when you feel like doing a boogie
all over the lawn.
Hey, they changed the record! Some jazz this time.
Friend of mine claims if Jesus came back now, he'd play a 6-string banjo instead of an electric guitar.
Maybe. I don't know.
They claimed in chapel the other morning that Jesus would go to college, so anything's possible.
He'd probably get in on a scholarship.

We come to college
live in boxes and eat in rows listen to records and drive to Michigan just to go—write nineteen-year-old poems
on the meaning of life and hope that some day
we'll know what we are writing.

"culture for service"
yea?
"knowledge is power"
doesn't quite sound right, here
"learn by doing and still have fun"
come again?
"do that which consists of taking no action,
and you will leave nothing undone" that sounds all right!
"I think, therefore I am"
what if it's too early in the day to think?
"O Lord, teach me thy paths"
well, in that case . . .

We wait. We slouch and yawn and laugh and sometimes try so hard to tell the truth.
And sometimes we tell the truth.
We love and hate, try and fail
Get so bone-aching tired we pray for help.
Sometimes we find it
and sometimes we're not so sure,
But we keep on looking.

We are not all the sons and daughters of Menno.
But we are a Mennonite school
in a Mennonite town.
What we are is what we have been.
Filing into Sunday School
Trying to sit easy on rock-hard pews
We raise our hands
Our heads are dampened.
And then we start to wonder.

I am all that my fathers were
and you are yours.

My fathers are followers of God's way of peace bound in self-giving love.
If you accept the way of my fathers,
they become your fathers too.

If you choose your own parents,
do not say that mine rejected you.
Know that love will never cast you off,
but always beckons you.

And do not mistake the way of my fathers
for my proud stamp on it.
When I forget that I am your brother,
forgive me and have patience with me.

Some words float down:
"The regenerated do not go to war."
"If a church is yet at one with the world
we cannot recognize it as a true church."
And we see Cadillacs in churchyards plates flowing with cash and pink checks.
But we wear blue jeans and T-shirts spend our money on records and bikes.
Are we at one with the world?

Randy Metzler

We are in the world
but not of it.
We look at ourselves
fixed in the light
try to move where the light leads.
It is not easy or painless;
it's living.

The simple thing
we need to do
is just as simple as a man.
To follow when we have to lead when we can and walk in the light of the Lord.

We came to the Union Auditorium on March 9, 10, and 11, expecting to enjoy a musical about a family of Russian Jews. Instead, when we had looked beyond the costumes and the Star of David, we saw ourselves.

Remember now, on the dim strands of racial memory—a quiet village, cows, chickens, and the furrowed fields. Then, change—the jackboot crashing in the door, desperate moving to an uncertain future, broad backs carrying the vast weight of the past. And the children—questioning, leaving, burning their fingers on the stove, bravely making their own mistakes.

We saw on those nights a people whose joys and trials are reflected in us. We felt a kinship, not only with them, but with all other wandering tribes who have no home on this earth. And if on those nights we became closer to ourselves, as well as to them and our common God, it was because, for a few hours, we had our own fiddler on the roof.

With festive spirit, undaunted by last season's heaviest blizzard, 200 GC students and profs produced "El Carnival." The Project Terremoto fund-raising event—under the planning of Paul Wingard and Geneva Newcomer—brought in $1800 in aid of the Nicaraguan earthquake victims.

The festivities included a variety of traditional and improvised carnival activities topped off by a talent show. Afternoon events included: baptism of your favorite prof in a dump tank, a slave auction, pin-ball, drinks at "El Baro Cheapo," and consumption of 1000 of Miller Third's homemade doughnuts. Evening brought to the Union stage the humor of Steve Massanari and Rohn Thomas, skits by the profs, the acrobatics of Shelley Myers, and music by a number of student groups. Highlight of the evening was the public debut of "South Shore," a newly-formed rock band. Either in response to a long and frustrating tri, or to the spirit and tradition-breaking themes of the Fiddler production, the music inspired what might be broadly termed a "folk dance" on the gym floor.

The whole affair shed a new light on the campus struggle for community—that to relax and enjoy each other's company is realistic communal living. Similar enthusiasm was found in the three other musical concerts and the collection of "common cents" by the profs which, combined with the carnival proceeds, comprised the $3500 campus contribution towards the Terremoto relief project.

Once again, Coach John Ingold presented Goshen College with a winning soccer squad. An impressive 5-1 record in conference play gave the Leafs a tie with Grace College for the conference championship, and their third straight invitation to District 21 playoffs; they were stopped only at the national playoffs in St. Louis.

GC soccer freaks were consistently treated to the sight of a well-rounded, experienced team rolling over their competition. The offense, sparked by Rich Clemens and Fred Driver, set a GC scoring record in the 16-1 mismatch against St. Francis College. The defense, with big-foots Brent Gotwals and Randy Miller, gave their opposition shut-out after shut-out for the appreciative GC fans.

Quite impressive for a small school. President Burkholder used the analogy of "little David against big Goliath" for our team, and it just could be.

You run until your lungs ache and your whole body says stop, and then keep on running. You wince when a ball smashes into your shins making a bruise on top of two others, but you ignore it and run some more. You wonder why you play this game—field hockey, but at the same time you know it's worthwhile without being able to explain it.

It has something to do with the autumn air and refreshing exercise, with working together at something new and enjoying the confusion it creates, with having confidence in others and feeling their support. It has to do with hockey camp, singing, seeing UFO's, and being rain-drenched; with the frustration of long grass, of losing when you deserved to win, and of losing when you deserved to lose.

FOOLSCAP

To be ourselves in the fullest sense, we must share ourselves with others; but to share ourselves we must communicate, in some way, some fragment of ourselves. There are myriads of ways to do this, and yet there are never enough, for there are always more things to be said than means to say them. At best, we offer a humble lump of mud for a bird, a wan ball for a moon, speckles for stars. And yet we must try, for it is what makes us what we are. The next pages show the ways that some of us have tried.

among burnt-out trailer courts and grass that was green
only when you looked through dark glasses and a sun
that was only a hole
in an ash-grey wall hazy
i met you
among dust and flowers
i gave you
After the fall the leaves started to pile up and we walked

on into winter
—signs being everywhere
i almost forgot
the afternoon we sat on the edge of the world and burning dead leaves and wood not so much to keep warm waited for the prayers end
when the light
from the fire would throw our shadows into the black ring of night

Church Closing

The night is still-born, grey and wet, but here are Two sumptuous pulpits and purple curtains edged in gold.
Elongated pilasters and windows soar
On right and left of me and delicately hold
The empty hush, the soft inside of a whale
That died and now lies washed up on the shore.

I sit alone and hear the night sounds: clangs
Of scrap beggars, children's yells, and vendors' calls,
The taxi horns, and buses' roars; the smell
Of rain blows in through the opened window walls,
Where I see the hotel lights flash off and on—
Black lacquer squares inlaid with neon shell.

The hollow carcass chapel echoes with
The thumps of windows closing as the old Church keeper dims the city noise and seals
The quietness in. He softly locks the cold
And rain outside the precious vacuum cage
Unspoiled by dirty hands and children's squeals.

Fringes

The hickory bow sings you come.
Carved bow,
boned bow,
strung with young calves hide.
Young deer hide.
Hear the singing, stalking bow
and quiver to the sound.
  To the woods,
  their mothers plead them,
  and deeper, deeper.
To the wood, yes,
and at the fringe the young deer hide,
strain to hear;
strung to bear
the hunter's heart's quivers.

Burn

I like to set fires
I love to burn
I like to crackle
I love to turn and twist in desire with golden heat
to melt, a dancing
flickering sheet
a sunrise orange
to boil and maim dangerous yellow unhuman flame
I blaze the timbers explode the night
flush out the darkness
split it with light
I deal out justice
to those who scream
to shatter calmness
a hell-born dream
To teach my lessons
out of the sun
I teach to respect
I teach to run
I'd like to teach you
You'd love to learn
I like to set fires
I love to burn

Tarnished Glory

A narrative essay by Paul Conrad

We always heard that The Athlete was somehow woven from gentlemanly conduct, ethical trustworthiness, and a tenacious perserverance in reaching his potential. We heard the pious athletic banquet speakers relating their lofty visions of Truth, dancing a striptease somewhere between the sweat on the practice field and the tears in the post-game locker room. We believed them, and went out for the team to pursue this elusive Truth because the girls and the community thought highly of their athletes. After all, it wasn't our place as high school athletes to get heady about such things—let the paunchy banquet speakers take care of that. We simply believed them.

We shouldn't have. We shouldn't have trusted those whose paunchiness resulted from their personal involvement with high school athletics; high school athletics were no more stalking their alleged truths than a month-old sweat sock was stalking sanitation.

I was probably wearing a month-old pair of socks the day we headed south for the Atlas Night Relays, the big invitational track meet of the year. The stadium seemed more like a carnival than an assault on truth; concession stands were open and various charities were selling cakes and pies. People were everywhere and the loudspeaker was constantly crackling out events and distances. It was a noisy, crowded place for our small town track team. I remember vividly three things about the atmosphere: girls, stealing, and running.

The girls are probably the least painful recollection of the three. Thanks to a few veterans, we set up camp near one of the main entrances and next to one of the larger concession stands. Hence, we had probably the best vantage points from which to scrutinize the various wiggles and jiggles that were in attendance. By noon we had refined the process: we divided the female anatomy into three sections and applied to each section a 1-10 rating system. All heads would turn when a I-1, II-1, III-1 passed by. Eventually our visual connoisseurring gave way to a more basic desire for verbal interaction. To secure that end, I, accompanied by several financial backers, bought a chocolate pie from a charity staffed by a nice 1-1-2 with beautiful brown eyes. Urged on by the cheers of the rest of the team back at the camp, we engaged in a pleasant conversation with her that ended with an exchange of addresses. All of this resulted in envy back at the camp, eventually a few letters, and, of course, the chocolate pie. Such gentlemanly interaction between the sexes, this connoisseurring and plotting! However, all resulted in the attainment of the much loftier goal of establishing meaningful, caring interpersonal relationships. Such is simply one of the valuable functions of athletics.

The second function was thieving. All of our equipment was constantly watched, yet we lost a set of shot puts, some warm-ups, and several pairs of shoes. Of course, we recovered the shots as soon as we discovered our loss . . . well, at least we obtained two more shots. Such practices even seemed encouraged: I overheard one coach marvelling over the successful heist of a fiberglass vaulting pole. I could see why rejoicing would be in order—a fiberglass pole isn't something you just stick in your pocket.

Thus inspired, several of us returned to camp and planned the abduction of a pair of shoes that lay on the fringes of our neighbors' camp. A warm-up was casually flopped over them and then, during the excitement of a race, the whole works was scooped up and carried away. It wasn't long, however, before our neighbors' hulking two hundred and twenty pound shotputter began rummaging about their camp. We trembled at the possibility that he might be looking for those shoes so we returned them, saying that someone must have inadvertently placed them in our camp. They were indeed the shotputter's and he expressed relief that they were found—he was afraid that he was going to have to kick off a very essential part of the offender's anatomy if they had been stolen. And so honesty won out again; it usually does when two hundred and twenty pounds of muscle are involved.

I recall most vividly and with the most pain the actual running. I ran the 440 yard dash. In my conference I had been respectable; in this star-studded competition I was naive. I didn't stop to think that the preliminary heats were quite slow since the good runners simply strided fast enough to insure a place in the much faster finals. And so, I found myself running third in the preliminaries. The second place runner apparently wanted in the finals even less than I did and slowed almost to a jog. Thinking I might actually have a chance, I sprinted past him and into the finals of the 440.

By the start of the finals I wished I had had the sense to feign lameness; the lights blazed down on the field as thousands of spectators packed the stands. The announcer was identifying the contestants by name. I would rather have remained anonymous. I vowed, nonetheless, to run a good race. Like a good athlete, I set my goal—don't finish last. My legs felt light and my stomach felt heavy as we stepped onto the track. Having the slowest time, I was in the outside lane. I nonchalantly carried my starting blocks out and hammered them in, casually kicking them to make certain they were solid. Then I practiced bursting out of the blocks, sprinting down the track, and pulling up stiff-legged to trot back to the line.

Eventually I was crouched in the blocks for real, resting easily on my toes and fingertips. The starter said "set" and I raised myself and stared at the starting line, envisioning myself exploding from a widening tunnel. The gun sounded and I knew I had a good start. My stride increased with the roar of the crowd and I was sailing as I'd never sailed before. My spikes crunched at what seemed an amazingly rapid rate and my eyes were fixed on the track ahead. I was performing superbly so I glanced over to see how the rest of the field was doing. They too were doing well. We were scarcely around the curve and everyone was pulling even with me; with the staggered start, that meant they were at least five yards ahead of me. This introduced a note of despair. I cut in before the flag because it gave the appearance that I was in range of the pack, it reduced the distance I had to run, and added the possibility that an official might disqualify me so I wouldn't have to continue.

Well, there's no need to lengthen a painful story. I finished a lagging last and lost myself in the crowded infield —not before a conscientious official sought me out and cursingly informed me that "If you'd have finished anything but last, I'd have disqualified you, kid."

My performing wasn't over; I was still slated to run the mile relay which was another quarter mile jaunt. I informed the coach that I was both too tired and too sick to my stomach to run. I would have, at that particular moment, volunteered for an appendectomy administered by our freshman manager if that would have kept me from stepping onto the track again. The coach told me that no one else could be coerced into running and that I would have to. So once again I found myself crouched in the blocks.

This time my legs were cast in iron and I could find no part of the athlete in myself that wanted to exhibit by practice starting. I was thinking of false starting three times (which would have disqualified us), but the gun exploded somewhere in a dream world before I could act. By the last curve my vision was so blurred that I couldn't see what position I was running in. I heard someone running just behind me and my addled mind told me it must be the last place man. I pumped and gasped to keep him from passing. I can't remember actually seeing my teammate; I passed the baton to a voice screaming "run-Bill-run" and then fell across someone's shoulders. They wisely led me to the infield where I threw up chocolate pie and, when I ran out of that, what seemed to be the bottom of my stomach.

As fate would have it, I had run a very respectable third out of nine; the team running in first dropped their baton and Ben tripped the guy that was running second. So we had a first place finish for which we each received a medal. We later received public praise for our fine behavior, our honesty in returning the track shoes, and our all-out effort in garnering such a high placing. These feats were also cited as evidence that high school athletics did instill gentlemanliness, honesty, and a habit of reaching one's potential. Such a citation was entirely in keeping with the banquet speaker's mentality and his ignorance of last places and two hundred and twenty pound shotputters. I still have my medal and a letter from the girl with brown eyes. She asked me if I liked her chocolate pie. I liked it better the first time.

Eastside Entrance

I.

Neon winds the colors of space
swirl us naked, cling like wine.
Sounds wink salvation
leer in tanglecotton rhyme. Fast Faster,
no death, no life, no stopping here
move on.
New channels in the night
pour like white gold ore
from the half wish sentence
where I am, here,
My corner of your world.

II.

In the morning
sounds were wings
that burned your mouth to mine.
To soar and turn
like fire twists and rolls toward the sun.
The waters part seasons spill like tides
What light waits for me
where your eyes cross the way I run?

III.

I do not know your eyes at all
They snake green depths island signs, old waters
Ancient songs of love and death and woe.
I do not know your eyes, I sing
I only know your mouth
and the eastside entrance
the entrance to my corner of your soul.

OFF CAMPUS

It's a laughing, crying life. (The joker said as he swaggered off-stage.) Knowing of a world beyond, we threw bridges across our moat. Forth from our Never-Never Land we crept (at the Man's urging) and appeared like alien sprites in Goshen rubber factories, and tiny schools in Costa Rica, and remote health clinics in Haiti. We laughed and cried. And went back across the moat again. (Forgot to pull the drawbridge back up.)

Rain on a tin roof, that relentless war of water shooting tin, carries me back to the mountains of Haiti. There rain made sense. It had consequences. Rain meant the work in the gardens had to stop. Rain meant lighting the one kerosene lamp and sitting the fury out under cover. Rain meant mud, inch-thick mud on cheap plastic sandals.

That deafening rain of two days and two nights made the flood of Noah's day seem utterly plausible to me. Never had I been so conscious of shelter. Never had I waited so long for a new earth.

You see, only the cities are cursed with electricity. In the small places wait until the moon drops off to bed and the man shuts down the gas generator.
Wait until the moths quit courting
the dim circles of light.

Ride the Great Bear's back: follow the arc to Arcturus, sail on to Spica and say hello to the Virgin.

Europa-Kolleg, Kassel: seven weeks of language study, wrestling Trennung verbs and dative endings, but more—riding strassenbahns, purchasing yoghurt and bratwurst lunches on Königsplatz, buying theater tickets, picnicking with Hercules—alles immer auf deutsch, bitte!

Berlin—big city bustle: a continual cycle of attending lectures, crossing borders, visiting museums, riding subways, and a tension—more than bustle or language barrier, we found ourselves quietly overwhelmed by the feeling of a city trapped within another country.

"Europe—where Anabaptist history comes alive!" a hike with Marlin through the rain and mud to the Anabaptist bridge—

They met there at night, to break bread and sing and share the Word. Working a full day, they walked for hours after dusk to their secret meeting place under the bridge, returning to their work again at dawn, without sleep, refreshed and rested from "the fellowship of kindred minds."

Much of the bridge has collapsed now; wild flowers grow beneath it, moss covers the chiseled-out 1633, but the ground—well, yes—it seems hallowed (in a way the Mennonite Historical Library never could be).

Marine Biology is not just swimming around looking for crabs, nor is it a "$350 suntan." It is long hours spent keying out specimens, getting up at 5:30 to catch the low tide, and "the worst burn on my backside I've seen yet."

But it is also exploration of a whole new world, beautiful almost beyond belief; steamed shrimp and conch chowder, and the simple satisfaction of coming to understand, no matter how imperfectly, something of the long chain of life in the ocean.

Jan King

After sixteen years as students, the roles are suddenly reversed, and we find ourselves on the other side of the desk, authority figure for a roomful of reluctant learners. We become part of the confusing world of public education, returning to campus only to eat, sleep, and check our mail. We learn how very long an hour is, that giving a test can be as agonizing as taking one, that teaching is a more-than-full-time job. Our personalities feel split, able to identify with those guys sleeping in the back row at the same time we are reprimanding them. We begin to appreciate the position of professors whose papers aren't always returned the day after they're handed in. Our conversations become sprinkled with possessives—"my school," "my room," "my kids." The six weeks that looked like forever when we began are nearly over when we suddenly realize that they are becoming both easier and more enjoyable.

"It's an uneasy feeling to find yourself discussing which medical liability insurance policy would best cover you should you be sued for malpractice. The situation does much to promote the feeling that we are no longer students solely responsible for ourselves. We are affecting the lives of others very seriously."

"As a senior I can look in retrospect at the Goshen program and see why it's so good. Not only are we taught facts and skills, but we spend time on ideals. We learn to treat people rather than bodies. If we've missed out on a few technical skills, we can pick them up in future years. We'd never be able to pick up the skill of communication."

"It's difficult for me to make the adjustment between hospital and school. Here I'm just me, relating to peers. There I'm an emerging professional, responsible for people of all ages. I'm beginning to see life in a more serious context."

Now entering its second year, the Study and Work program gives destitute students a chance to see their bank accounts actually grow (at least until the next registration rolls around). In factories, license bureaus, and nursing homes, SAW students find themselves rubbing shoulders with blue collar workers, the elderly, and the not-so-apocryphal silent majority. Their work may be interesting or mind-numbing; at the very least, it is a change from the intellectual demands of college. One student reacts this way:

"I work with a man who worked with atomic weapons in the Navy. He talks quite casually about things like crater diameter and burning plutonium and a nuclear bomb the size of a bowling ball . . . yet he's a good man, not a mindless redneck at all. You just don't meet people like him at the college."

Paul Zehr

INDIVIDUALS

Students and staff and harried professors—the elusive community is caught grin-faced and humbled by the unforgiving eye. (The collective smile is the photographers' fault, not ours.)
